COSTA RICA VISITOR ENTRY & STAY GUIDE FOR DIGITAL NOMAD GUESTS

A quick guide to Costa Rica Visitor Entry & Stay Guide for Digital Nomad Guests

Coming to Costa Rica for two weeks or one month?

First check visitor entry. The remote worker category is a separate option for longer stays; it is not an automatic requirement of La Casita's program.

> Booking the Digital Nomad Stay does not mean you must apply for a digital nomad visa.

What to check?

1. Do you need a visa to enter as a visitor?

It depends on your nationality and travel documents. Some people can enter without applying for a consular visa; others need one, even for a short trip. Check the rule for your passport.

2. How many days may you be authorized to stay?

The period depends on your country group: official guidance includes cases of up to 180 days and others of up to 30. The maximum is not automatic; Migration sets your permitted stay when you enter. Check the days recorded in your passport or entry record.

3. Compare that period with your dates

If you are visiting for 15 days or one month and visitor entry covers your full stay, do not apply for the remote worker category just because you are joining our program. If you plan to stay beyond your visitor authorization, ask Migration or the consulate which option applies.

A quick guide to Costa Rica's remote worker immigration category.

When should you consider the remote worker category?

Costa Rica offers a category that may authorize a stay of up to one year, with an option to request renewal, subject to eligibility and approval. It may be an option if you want to stay beyond the period available to you as a visitor. There is no day count that automatically requires everyone to apply: compare your plan with the authorization that applies to you.

Its eligibility, income, insurance, and document requirements apply only to people who choose to apply for that category; they are not requirements for booking at La Casita.

> In short: first check whether you need a visitor visa and how many days you may be authorized to stay. Consider the remote worker category only if it fits your length of stay and circumstances.

Note: This guide covers entry and length of stay. If you will work online during your trip, confirm with DGME or the consulate whether the status you plan to use covers that activity. La Casita confirms dates and services but does not determine immigration eligibility.
